Latin America: Borders & Identities

Students taking YLS3202-Advanced Spanish: Latin America, Borders and Identities will build upon the linguistic and cultural knowledge gained at the beginning and intermediate Spanish levels to explore the complex history and evolution of Latin America. Using a representative selection of texts (e.g., short stories, films, articles, and book excerpts), the course will explore issues such as: the Pre-Columbian history of the region, the colonial period and its legacy, the role of the United States, migration and human rights, and key political and social events in the history of these nations. Students will analyze and contextualize course materials via in-class discussions and presentations on the history, traditions, and ideas embedded within them. This module emphasizes students' oral participation and written production, paying special attention to fluency and accuracy in language use.

Through several related assignments, students will have a chance to pursue their own interests within the course. This course is taught entirely in Spanish but some of the readings will be in English.
